

Restoration Pavilion

Executive Summary:

America's tremendous industrial capacity and legendary production of artillery, tanks, airplanes, and other equipment proved to be a considerable asset during the war effort and helped to fuel victory in World War II when many major technologies were used for the first time. The Restoration Pavilion will allow the public a permanent behind-the-scenes view of essential restoration and preservation of these priceless relics of the war years.

Visitors will be able to see the first-hand, the techniques that conservators use to repair and restore World War II-era boats, vehicles, weapons, military equipment, and other artifacts which play an important role in telling the stories of World War II. The Facility will also serve as a storage area for macro artifacts and parts of the Museum collections.
