Sailing the Rhine River amazes and inspires with its majestic cathedrals, castles, and fortresses, as rural landscapes meld into historic cities such as Cologne and Strasbourg. In 1944, Allied military planners and soldiers thought of the Rhine in different terms—as the door to Germany and the end of World War II—and, hopefully, a ticket home. This extraordinary journey from Amsterdam to Basel will immerse you in the Allied struggles to reach and ultimately cross the Rhine, the western gateway into the heart of the Third Reich.

Starting in Amsterdam, we encounter the horrors of Nazi occupation. A visit to the Anne Frank House puts us in the Secret Annex where Anne and her family hid for over two years. To touch the walls is to feel the history of the room. As you walk through the annex, you can almost see young Anne making entries in her diary.

Traveling through the city by canal boat, pass sites vital to the Dutch resistance in its heroic battle against the Nazi occupiers. Hear stories of Resistance members who stole specialized cardboard to forge identity passes, and an orphanage director who tried to save Jewish children by reporting a scarlet fever outbreak in his facility. See the remains of soup kitchens the Dutch relied upon during the terrible Hunger Winter of 1944-45.

Sailing south from Amsterdam, the River Empress enters the drop zones for Operation MARKET-GARDEN, the failed airborne operation to break through to the Rhine and cross into the German homeland. Had it been successful, this massive Anglo-American operation, the largest air-drop of World War II, could have had the Allies in Berlin before the Russians.

Continuing south, get a glimpse of the cost Germany paid for waging aggressive war. On May 30, 1942, Cologne was the target of Britain’s first 1,000 bomber raid of the war. Six-hundred acres of the city were flattened. This was the first of dozens of Allied bombing raids on Cologne, which was in total ruin by the end of the war, with its magnificent cathedral damaged but miraculously still standing. Southwest of Bonn, travel inland by coach to the haunting Huertgen Forest, scene of the most brutally contested American battle of the European war—a battle covered closely by Ernest Hemingway. We travel first to Vogelsang, situated high above the forest, with magnificent views, and its strategically important dams. Vogelsang is a perfectly preserved training ground, the only one its kind, where future Nazi Party leaders once trained. Its curriculum is centered on the inculcation of Nazi racial ideology. This is the central theme of its modern museum, which evokes with terrifying candor the Nazi racial message.

As we enter Alsace and Lorraine, Germany will be to our east and France to the west. These two regions have long been a point of contention between the two countries. Operation NORDWIND, the last German offensive in the west, was fought here. Free French and American forces stopped the German Army just short of historic Strasbourg.

Our journey down the Rhine takes us to one of the most evocative but least visited theaters of World War II. I look forward to welcoming you to the Last Lines of Defense.

Sincerely,
Donald L. Miller, PhD
Sail through beautiful landscapes that inspired fairy tales and survived fire fights.

Adorned with medieval castles, wineries, and gorgeous landscapes, cruise along the spellbinding Rhine River. Gaze upon fairytale landscapes that were once the prime target during World War II for military planners looking to shorten the war and bring about the downfall of Nazi Germany. From 1944 through 1945, the Rhine was the most hotly contested body of water in all of Europe. There would be no premature peace or negotiated settlement with Nazi leaders. Crossing the Rhine, and bringing about Germany's unconditional surrender would assure an enduring peace.

The first attempt to jump across the Rhine was planned by British Field Marshall Bernard Montgomery. His ambitious plan, Operation MARKET-GARDEN, hoped to conclude the war by the end of 1944. The combined ground and airborne operation was a spectacular sight on its first day. Citizens across the southern portions of the Netherlands could see thousands of paratroopers descending onto the flat terrain below. With skill, precision, and speed, paratroopers captured bridges throughout the region, paving the way for the armored forces to move into position. However, bridges not captured in Nijmegen and Arnhem stalled the offensive, and the river would not be crossed in 1944.

Allied bombers flew mission after mission into Germany, weaving a path of destruction across the Rhine and all the way to Berlin. In Cologne, the majority of the city, including its magnificent cathedral, succumbed to the bombing. In Mainz, numerous raids took a toll on the ancient Roman city. A few cities escaped the rubble-strewn fates of their neighbors. Heidelberg, lacking the main industrial centers, was not a priority and remained intact.

By 1945, the Allies began massing large numbers of men along the banks of the Rhine in preparation for spring offensives. A chance breakthrough occurred first in the town of Remagen, followed by crossings near Koblenz and Rees. The series of offensives from the Netherlands through Germany succeeded in several bridgeheads east of the Rhine in late-March. Once across the river, German resistance crumbled. Skirmishes against committed Wehrmacht and SS troops continued, but in town after town, white flags of surrender adorned people's homes. German officers attempted to rally their men, but surrender was the more attractive option with each Allied victory. On May 8, 1945, Germany surrendered, and the task of rebuilding Europe began.

Relive the plight of the paratroopers from the 82nd Airborne who crossed the Waal River in canvas paddle boats with a mission of taking the bridges in Nijmegen.
The Rhine was the last natural obstacle on the road to Berlin, and British Field Marshall Bernard Montgomery believed that a hasty crossing without adequate planning and preparation could leave units isolated and waste material. He advised American commanders and subordinates to wait for his planned Operation Plunder. Montgomery’s plan involved 1.2 million men, and it coordinated airborne drops in support of his invasion. His crossing would be the main drive on the road to Berlin—and it was not just a way to defeat Germany, it was a race to beat Montgomery and the British to the other side.

Beginning with the invasion of Sicily in 1943, Patton and Montgomery were unofficial rivals in races to major objectives. On August 17, 1943, Patton beat Montgomery’s forces to Messina by a few hours, ending the Sicilian campaign. When the British arrived in Messina, GIs asked, “Where you tourists been?” In Normandy, Patton insisted on closing the Falaise Gap, but Bradley ordered him to halt and protect the lines he held, and Montgomery was able to give the message that the gap was sealed.

When it came to the Rhine, the prize was even greater. The first crossing of the last major obstacle on the Road to Berlin meant the glory of beating the Germans in their homeland, and Patton was determined to make it across first. On March 22, the day before Montgomery’s Operation Plunder would cross the Rhine to the north, Patton eyed an opportunity to cross the Rhine by boat. “We’re going to cross the Rhine...and we’re going to do it before I’m a day older,” he declared. At 10:30 pm, assault boats carried the first soldiers from the 5th Infantry Division across. By morning, ferries and floating bridges brought tanks and more soldiers across. On March 24, Patton crossed by pontoon bridge, making a point to note in his diary that he urinated in the Rhine, and picked up some dirt on the other side. Reporting his achievement, Patton boasted to headquarters, “you can tell the world Third Army made it before Monty.”

Once across the river, Patton pushed forward, but was distracted by the prospect of freeing his son-in-law from a prison camp near Hammelburg. The operation failed, but with the war nearing its end, his superiors did not issue any official public rebukes, though Eisenhower referred to it as “Patton’s latest crackpot actions.” By the end of April, with Germans surrendering in large numbers and no more races to be won, Patton wrote, “Personally I cannot see that there is much more glory in this war, and I am afraid it will end in an anti-climax.”
Ever since the Normandy landings in June 1944, America’s primary objective had been to push across the Rhine River and into Germany. This objective was accomplished on March 7, 1945, when elements of the 9th Armored Division discovered an undamaged bridge at Remagen, Germany. Despite German attempts to destroy the bridge, the 9th Armored was able to cross and establish a beachhead in Germany. Ten days after the bridge’s capture it collapsed, but by that time other crossings had been established across the Rhine. This flag was signed by members of B Company, 14th Tank Battalion, 9th Armored Division, some of whom assisted in the initial capture of the bridge.

Douglas C-47 Skytrain “096”

The purchase and restoration of the C-47 was made possible through a gift from Paul Hilliard. The National WWII Museum Inc., 2006.181

The National WWII Museum’s C-47, serial number 42-93096, was built at the Douglas Aircraft Manufacturing plant in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. “096” was delivered to the US Army on April 8, 1944, at which time it was assigned to the 806th Army Air Force Base Unit at Baer Field, Indiana. The following month “096” was assigned to the 8th Air Force and transferred to the European theater of operations. Immediately after arriving in England on May 28, 1944, the aircraft was transferred to the 9th Air Force. One week after arriving in England, “096” carried pathfinders from the 82nd Airborne Division into the Normandy invasion. The plane then dropped pathfinders from the 101st Airborne Division into Holland during Operation MARKET-GARDEN. “096” also flew with the rest of its group to drop supplies to the 101st in Bastogne during the Battle of the Bulge. During this mission, “096” sustained minor damage from German ground fire, but the plane was repaired and placed back in service in a matter of days. The plane’s final combat mission occurred on March 24, 1945, when it dropped paratroopers from the 17th Airborne Division across the Rhine River during Operation VARSITY.

After the war, “096” participated in the Berlin Airlift before being transferred to the Finnish Air Force. After decades of service as both a military and civilian transport plane, and a reprisal of its participation in MARKET-GARDEN for the movie A Bridge Too Far, “096” became a part of The National WWII Museum’s collection in 2006. It is on permanent exhibit in the Louisiana Memorial Pavilion.

M-43 Field Jacket and Trousers

Flight officer James Preninger copiloted his glider during the invasion of Normandy but was wounded by shrapnel on June 7, 1944. He spent six weeks in an Army hospital before returning to his squadron.

Preninger flew the lead glider on his second and final combat mission on March 24, 1945, as part of Operation VARSITY, the airborne assault across the Rhine River. Before reaching the landing zone, the C-47 towing Preninger’s CG-4A glider ran into trouble.

“Colonel Lewis was towing me and Drew Anderson...and just as he crossed the Rhine River, a machine gun nest underneath...[fired and] shot his left engine out. It caught fire...Lewis flew the next nine miles towing two fully loaded gliders on one engine—his right engine. And he flew it all the way. I could see my landing zone. [A] great, big, level field...When I got the green light, I cut off and landed.”
The fall of the Netherlands to Nazi Germany resulted in a gradual worsening of conditions for the entire country. The Germans systematically enacted a series of restrictions on the activities of Dutch Jews, leading to a strike by Dutch workers in 1941. By 1942, Otto Frank and his family were forced into hiding. For over two years, the Frank family hid in a location called the Secret Annex, where Anne Frank kept a diary of her thoughts and experiences. The home and Secret Annex is now a museum, and it is here where the day’s journey begins. Continue to the Dutch Resistance Museum to discover the many sides of resistance shown by the brave citizens in the Netherlands.

“...The world’s been turned upside down. The most decent people are being sent to concentration camps, prisons and lonely cells, while the lowest of the low rule over young and old, rich and poor.”

Operation VARSITY, combined with the ground offensive Operation PLUNDER, was a massive, direct strike across the Rhine River. On March 24, 1945, 14,000 paratroopers descended east of the Rhine River between the towns of Rees and Wessel. The evening before, ground forces crossed temporary bridges in the same sector. However, VARSITY would not be the first crossing. Circumstances elsewhere along the Rhine allowed two other major crossings in the weeks prior at Remagen and Oppenheim. VARSITY succeeded in creating a broad front across the Rhine, and again showed the potential dangers and limitations of large airborne drops.

Planned by Field Marshal Bernard Montgomery, VARSITY was a series of firsts. It was the first combat jump for the US 17th Airborne Division, and it marked the first airborne assault across the Rhine. The C-46 Commando joined the C-47 Skytrain in ferrying paratroopers to their drop zones. The C-46 was larger, held twice as many paratroopers, and it featured twin jump doors in the rear. But the performance of the larger aircraft was dubious. Its larger size combined with the low altitude and slow speeds required for the drops made it an inviting target. When hit near a fuel tank, gasoline would pass through heated areas, causing many of the planes to catch fire. Because of the many dangers, the C-46 continued its use as a cargo plane, but General Matthew Ridgway restricted their use in airborne drops.

While passing over the Rhine, the men could see the crossings taking place below them. Once on the ground, progress was rapid, but the victories were hard-won. Casualties mounted for the British 6th and US 17th Airborne Divisions. In total, the divisions lost nearly 3,000 men, including 460 killed. Still, by the end of the day on March 24, the bridgehead across the Rhine extended 25 miles in length and had penetrated seven miles beyond the river. Montgomery’s strike across the Rhine had succeeded, though not at the first crossing as originally intended. With growing numbers of Allied troops across the Rhine, Germany’s final defeat was nearing. With Germany’s surrender looming, Operation VARSITY was the last airborne drop of World War II.
Today’s tour brings guests to the American side of Operation MARKET-GARDEN and the southern half of “Hell’s Highway.” In Nijmegen, visit the site of the Waal River Crossing where 240 men of the 3rd Battalion, 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne crossed the river in canvas boats under heavy fire. More than half of the men became casualties, and a memorial lists the names of the 48 men who died in the crossing. The National Liberation Museum in Groesbeek contains artifacts and stories from the liberation of Nijmegen and the surrounding areas. To the south, near Eindhoven, the 101st Airborne including E Company, 506th Parachute Infantry Regiment, the “Band of Brothers,” captured bridges, allowing the ground assault to make its push to Arnhem.

General James “Slim Jim” Gavin ordered a crossing of the Waal River during daylight hours so the Americans could outflank the German defenders, who were dug in around the city’s crucial bridges.

The Rijksmuseum contains over one million objects dating back to the 13th century. Included in the collection are works by Rembrandt, Frans Hals, and Johannes Vermeer. Rembrandt’s The Night Watch is prominently displayed and attracts thousands of visitors each day. In various sections of the museum, glimpses of World War II appear. The history of Dutch colonies in the East Indies lends insight into their role in the War in the Pacific. A Nazi chess set dating from around 1940 celebrates Germany’s victories from 1939-1940. THROUGH THEIR EYES
T. MOFFATT BURRISS & THE WAAL CROSSING

From 1940-1945, T. Moffatt Burriss went from Clemson graduate and first-year physics teacher to a battle-hardened paratrooper who fought through Sicily, Anzio, Nijmegen, and the Ardennes with the 3rd Battalion, 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment of the 82nd Airborne Division. At Fort Benning in 1942, Burriss volunteered for the paratroopers, lured in part by the extra pay and in part by a remark from a former ROTC classmate who claimed that paratroopers “never have to dig a foxhole and live in it for three months.” He would end the war as a hero of Operation MARKET-GARDEN and one of only a few Americans to cross the Elbe River before the German surrender.

Burriss participated in the fighting in Anzio in 1943 with the 504th. The tough fighting and determined German defenders along with the winter weather in the mountains took its toll on the regiment, and it was held in reserve during D-Day. Several times, Burriss and the 504th attended briefings on jumps to support Patton’s advance across France, but each time the operations were cancelled because Patton had overrun the drop zone ahead of schedule. Burriss’s next jump would wait until September as part of Operation MARKET-GARDEN.

MARKET-GARDEN was an airborne-directed operation in the southern Netherlands with a goal of getting across the Rhine and into Germany before winter. British Field Marshall Bernard Montgomery planned for the paratroopers to capture a series of bridges between Eindhoven and Arnhem to protect the ground forces w would advance into the area. At this time, Burriss attained the rank of captain and was company commander of I Company. His mission upon landing was to capture the north end of the Grave Bridge, which was the longest bridge in Europe at the time.

As Burriss’s plane entered the Netherlands, it encountered flak. Looking out, he could see a plane carrying H Company go down as all of the paratroopers made it out. For Burriss and I Company, he recalls, “If ever we made a perfect jump, this was it.” In less than one hour, I Company captured their objective along with a handful of German defenders. Two days later, Burriss would find out that the operation was not going as well to the north in Nijmegen and Arnhem. The British were facing German armor, and the paratroopers were in danger of losing the Bridge in Arnhem. Complicating matters, the bridge in Nijmegen was not secured, meaning the Americans could not provide assistance.

Burriss received orders that his men were to help take the bridge in Nijmegen by crossing the Waal River in paddle boats and attacking from the north side.

At this point, the Waal River was 300 yards across, with swirling currents. The paddle boats were late on the morning of September 20, and they were not the boats the paratroopers expected to see. The boats had plywood bottoms and green canvas sides. Burriss thought that they “wouldn’t make it across a swimming pool.” They were also short on paddles. Sixteen men in each boat would only have five or six paddles between them. They would have to do, and the men would use their rifle butts as paddles.

The trip across was a nightmare. The first boats slipped away and began floating downstream with only a few men frantically trying to paddle across. Once the men were finally in the boats, the Germans opened up with machine gun fire. Burriss remembers the bullets coming so fast that the “sky was raining bullets.” Landing with his men, Burriss quickly sought cover. The German machine gunners shifted their aim to the men ashore, but with grenades and suitable cover from the dykes, Burriss and I Company attacked every German position they could find and proceeded to the bridge. Several hours later, the bridges at Nijmegen were secured.

The movement to Arnhem was not fast enough to relieve the British paratroopers. Congestion along the roads hindered the relief, and the gains made by the paratroopers began to collapse. Burriss and I Company performed admirably, seizing their objective and conducting a near impossible mission on paddle boats across the river. The Allies made gains into the Netherlands, but the gains were more territory that needed defending. The push to the Rhine would go through France.
Day 5
A BRIDGE TOO FAR
October 22, 2018

The story of Operation MARKET-GARDEN continues in Arnhem, where outgunned British paratroopers fought a desperate battle against German tanks. At the Airborne Museum in the former Hartenstein Hotel, stand in the headquarters of British General Roy Urquhart. This hotel, with its large windows and location along a leafy suburban street, was an awful site in September 1944. Trenches covered the grounds and the trees were blown apart by the artillery. The Museum has recreated this macabre scene in its latest exhibition. Returning to Nijmegen, traverse the island, where Easy Company held ground in October 1944. This strip of land was surrounded on all sides by canals and rivers, and the Germans had a clear view of troop movements. During Operation PEGASUS II, Easy Company participated in the rescue of around 100 British soldiers who had evaded capture and were in hiding behind German lines near Arnhem.

Day 6
COLOGNE
October 23, 2018

Winston Churchill sent a telegram to Roosevelt after the raid, “I hope you were pleased with our mass air attack... there is plenty more to come.”

Visit the Cologne Cathedral, a UNESCO World Heritage Site and the tallest building in the world from 1880-1884. On May 30, 1942, the Royal Air Force launched its first 1,000-bomber raid against Cologne. For 90 minutes, planes passed over the city dropping their bombs and explosives. Fires raged throughout the city, and by the next day, at least 469 were dead and 45,000 people were left homeless. The spectacular Cologne Cathedral escaped destruction during the raid, its twin spires still dominating the skyline of the city. The bombing continued as the Allies aimed to soften up German defenses and drain the morale of the civilian population. In March 1945, there was a spectacular tank duel in front of the cathedral caught in dramatic combat film footage. The cathedral took on severe damage, but restoration work commenced post-war, and was completed in 1956.

As early as 1941, the Royal Air Force was targeting the industrial city of Mainz. A key stronghold along the Siegfried Line, Mainz was a frequent target of Allied bombers after D-Day. The rebuilt Mainz is Germany’s wine capital, and its annual Weinmarkt dates to 1946, when the French donated 1,000 liters of wine as a gesture of friendship. After walking through the Old Town and marveling at the cathedral, reflect on the stop in Cologne. Together these towns underscore the destructive nature of modern warfare and the resilience shown by the local population in their rebuilding efforts.

As the terrible winter of 1944-45 subsided, plans for a crossing of the Rhine River and a large push toward Berlin solidified. Field Marshall Bernard Montgomery would plan and execute a combined ground and airborne operation to cross the Rhine between the towns of Rees and Wesen. To support this operation, other units approached the banks of the Rhine to support the flank of Montgomery’s force. The US 9th Armored Division and its commander of A Company, 27th Armored Infantry Battalion, Lieutenant Karl Timmermann approached the town of Remagen, just south of Bonn. Born in Frankfurt, Germany, to an American father and German mother, Timmermann returned to his country of birth and took advantage of one of the war’s most miraculous occurrences, an intact bridge across the Rhine River.

In March 1945, Timmermann wrote to his wife, “There is no glory in war. Maybe those who have never been in battle find that certain glory and glamour that doesn’t exist. Perhaps they get it from the movies or the comic strips.” By March 7, Timmermann’s scouts discovered a bridge that would prove him wrong. In the early afternoon, scouts hailed Timmermann’s jeep. Moving forward, he could see an intact bridge through the drizzle and haze that German soldiers were still retreating across with their trucks and horses. Once the bridge was cleared, a German officer turned the key on his detonation device—and nothing happened. A German sergeant lit the fuse on the bridge by hand, causing an explosion, but as the dust and smoke cleared, the bridge still stood. Timmermann and his men led the charge across the bridge.

Without any air support, A Company had crossed the Rhine.

German prisoners marched back across the Rhine on the same bridge they failed to destroy. Counterattacks and German plans to destroy the bridge through the night failed. Moving with extreme caution, Sherman tanks rumbled across the bridge in the dark of night. Eisenhower was ecstatic, calling it the “best break we’ve had.” He ordered five divisions to cross the bridge, and work to protect this fortunate crossing began in earnest. Engineers constructed protective booms and netting in the water, and 25 barrage balloons and hundreds of antiaircraft guns kept German planes at bay. A floating treadway bridge constructed downstream ensured that vehicles and armor could cross and support the growing bridgehead.

The loss of an intact bridge was a disaster. Hitler stripped General Gerd von Rundstedt of his command for the second time, and four junior officers blamed for the failure to destroy the bridge were tried, convicted, and executed—all in the same day. German attacks on the bridge continued, and harsh winds and vibrations from the shelling and antiaircraft finally wore the bridge down, and it tilted. Engineers tried to save it, but the bridge buckled and fell into the Rhine on March 17. Twenty-eight men died as the bridge fell. The loss of the bridge was more symbolic than strategic. Within a week, eight Allied crossings would span the Rhine, and the door to Germany was wide open.
In contrast to Cologne and Mainz, Heidelberg was spared by Allied bombers. The city was not heavily fortified, nor did it have a large industrial sector. The only significant damage done to the city was the destruction of its bridges by retreating German soldiers. Today, Heidelberg retains its baroque charm. A visit to the ruins of Heidelberg Castle reveals the Renaissance architecture of a once glorious palace. The downfall of the castle began during the Thirty Years’ War when it changed hands among various combatants several times. A lightning strike interrupted reconstruction efforts in the 19th century, and by 1900 the castle existed in a state of preservation. Today, the ruins of the castle reveal details of the various restoration attempts.

On December 31, 1944, one last major German counterattack caught the Western Allies off-guard. Hoping to inflict mass casualties and draw Patton from Bastogne, German forces attacked in the direction of Strasbourg. For almost one month, American and French troops held back the German attempt to recapture Strasbourg. Near the end of the conflict, Audie Murphy held back 200 Germans and six panzers in the forests near the picturesque town of Colmar.

On a fitting close to the tour, honor Audie Murphy’s heroism in Colmar and his status as the most decorated soldier of the war.

Optional Post-Tour
THE REICH IN RUINS
OCTOBER 28-30, 2018 • From $1,599 per person
$2,098 single accommodations (limited availability). $99 per person taxes and fees are additional.

Continue through southern Germany on the custom-designed post-tour, The Reich in Ruins. This tour continues the story of the Allied forces as they crossed the Rhine and drove forward into Germany’s heartland. Behind the Rhine, a series of concentration camps revealed the evil of the Nazi regime and shocked the soldiers who approached the gates. At the conclusion of the fighting, soldiers in the Bavarian Alps settled in for occupation duty in the shadow of Hitler’s mountain residence.

The tour starts with a visit to the Dachau Concentration Camp on the outskirts of Munich. Opened in 1933, Dachau was the first concentration camp in Germany, and its first prisoners were German Communists, Social Democrats, trade unionists, and other political opponents of the Nazi regime. Starting in 1938, large numbers of Jews arrived at Dachau as a result of new, stricter, anti-Jewish measures in Germany. The camp was expanded several times, and conditions worsened. On the eve of its liberation, Dachau and its subcamps held 67,665 registered prisoners.

The post-tour concludes with a visit to Berchtesgaden and the Obersalzberg. Hitler’s residence here, the Berghof, was the most popular of his homes. In the mid-1930s, Germans would line up near the entrance, hoping to catch a glimpse of Hitler entering or leaving the residence. In the closing days of the war, the home was bombed, and SS guards set fire to the complex. Hoping to avoid leaving a shrine for post-war Nazis, the local government destroyed the remaining structures, along with residences of Herman Goering and Martin Bormann. Today, the Dokumentation Obersalzberg interprets the wartime history of the area and provides access to the underground bunkers built in 1943.

Discover this five-star, classic hotel in the heart of Munich with breathtaking views of this vibrant city.

For those participating in the optional post-tour, unwind at the Hotel Kempinski, centrally located in the heart of Munich. With exquisite dining and a luxury day spa, this property features a range of relaxing beauty treatments, a swimming pool, and breathtaking views over the rooftops of Munich. Rooms feature free Wi-Fi, choice of pillows, flat-screen TV, safe, and warm luxurious modern décor.

Enjoy the first two nights of your journey discovering Amsterdam.

With a prime location along the Amstel River and in walking distance of the refined Museum Quarter, the five-star De L’Europe is steeped in history. Feel at home in this 19th century treasure while exploring a modern vibrant city. Rooms feature COCO-MAT top-mattresses with pillow options, Nespresso® coffee maker and mini-bar, safety deposit box with electric outlet for laptops, large bathrooms with heated floor, exclusive De L’Europe fragrance and skincare developed by Blaise Mautin, built-in electrical converter, flat-screen LCD TV-DVD/Radio/CD/Apple TV, high-speed hardwired or wireless internet.
Experience WWII destinations on an elegant river cruise tour

The cosmopolitan style of River Empress, with its rich jewel tones and vibrant atmosphere, will captivate and delight you. Whether you’re dining in the ship’s sleek restaurant—reminiscent of a New York jazz and supper club—or relaxing over a cup of tea on the Sun Deck as you gaze out at the 360-degree view, there is no better or more relaxing way to travel through the scenic heartland of Europe. Find inspiration in the romantic, soul-stirring beauty of the fabled Rhine River. Flowers tumble from baskets lining streets of half-timbered houses, and lights glint off quiet canals. A mighty river carries ships and cargo through a landscape shaped by time and history. The spires of medieval churches and castles appear around each bend in the river, and vineyards climb the verdant hillsides. Cruise along the Rhine—Germany on one side, France on the other and discover the terror of a war that once plagued this picturesque scene.
