ABOUT THE TOUR

Join us on a journey into the intelligence and espionage of World War II. Traveling from London to the Midlands, examine intelligence collecting from the highest level to the individual spy. Bletchley Park, home of the WWII codebreakers, is the centerpiece of this tour. Pay tribute to the women of the Y-Stations who intercepted and transcribed German messages sent via Morse code. Go underground at the Churchill War Rooms and visit the famous Map Room. Along the way, hear the tales of field operatives, spies, and double agents who played significant roles in the defeat of Nazi Germany.

ALAN TURING & WWII INTELLIGENCE

After the war, Turing worked on computing and artificial intelligence. His “Turing Test” for artificial intelligence came to the forefront recently with ChatGPT and other recent AI systems that have gone public. The test of whether an independent judge can determine whether he or she is communicating with a machine or a human is being discussed more often as these systems improve their communication.

Alan Turing has become synonymous with Bletchley Park and the code-breaking operation, but his overall role is much more complex—and interesting. After the Poles had created a working mechanism for decrypting messages sent by the German’s Enigma machines, Turing set out to develop the next step in cracking German cyphers. The Polish method worked as long as the Germans did not change their procedures, which they did in 1940. Turing, who excelled at theoretical mathematics developed a system of decryption that was less sensitive to changes in German encryption procedures. The result was the Bombe Machine.

By 1942, the Bletchley operation had grown immensely in size and much of the work was being done mechanically. At peak output, Bletchley Park was decrypting 84,000 messages per month. With less theoretical work to do, Turing traveled to the United States to advise the Navy on their own Bombe Machines and worked with Bell Labs to encrypt communications. His work with Bell Labs created an encrypted line between Roosevelt and Churchill that was impenetrable for the Germans.

Book early and save!

Bletchley Park will be at the centerpiece of this tour, and we are honored to have Sir John Dermot Turing’s commitment to join us as we walk the grounds where his uncle Alan Turing’s significant contribution to the war effort took place. Dermot Turing is the acclaimed author of Prof, a biography of his famous uncle, The Story of Computing, and most recently X, Y and Z – The Real Story of How Enigma was Broken. He is also a regular speaker at historical and other events. He began writing in 2014 after a career in law. Dermot is a trustee of the Turing Trust and a Visiting Fellow at Kellogg College, Oxford. His enthusiasm for and devotion to intelligence history is extraordinary.
